MG is led by Mari Gallagher, who has worked on community lending projects and policies across America as a practitioner and later as a researcher. As executive director of a nonprofit, she oversaw programs to help small business with their business plans and applications for traditional and government loans as well as grant programs. She analyzed loan portfolios for several community banks, mapped national immigrant loans and the banks that cater to them for the FDIC, led board strategic planning sessions, developed written business plans for several midsize community banks seeking expansion, and conducted surveys and focus groups for the Chicago Federal Reserve Bank and National Federal Reserve Bank. The project for the latter, which took place in Georgia, Tennessee, and Florida, won a consumer award. Additionally, Mari has worked as a hands-on consultant for a number of community development financial institutions (CDFIs), developing loan pipelines, market studies, and strategic plans. For a major national foundation, she led a project that assessed and mapped their internal investment portfolio. She has written numerous articles for the Chicago Federal Reserve Bank on community lending which have been published in their magazines.
